Murray Boy Who Has Not Missed Sunday School In Ten Years.

Noah L. Gilbert, Jr., son of N. L. Gilbert, of Murray, has attended the Baptist Sunday-school every Sunday for ten consecutive years. When the boy first started to Sunday-school he was very small and was inspired to regular attendance by the offer by the pastor of the church that he would give a book for every three-months' attendance without absence, and if there had not been an absence in a whole year at the end of it a better book would be given, making five books in all. From the time he decided to attend regularly ten years ago he has not missed a Sunday. He has acquired quite a library for a boy through the gifts of the pastor, H. Boyce Taylor.

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 24.—This case of Thomas S. Byars, commissioner of motor vehicles, charged with appropriating the State's money, was continued in the Franklin Circuit Court until the April term on account of the inability of a handwriting expert to be here next week.

Just a Delicate Hint.

Allen, aged five, was passing the afternoon with his aunt in the suburbs, and after he had been at play for a time he said: "Aunt Mary, mamma said I wasn't to ask you for a piece of pie, but she didn't tell me not to take it if you offered it to me."

Editor to Sue Merchants.

R. B. McGregor, editor and publisher of the Webster County News, at Clay, Ky., will file suit against business men of that place for alleged violation of contract. It is alleged that when McGregor launched his paper at Clay the business men promised McGregor all their support in advertising and job work, but now as another paper has been started McGregor claims to have a written contract, to have been fair in his dealings and to have made an earnest effort to establish a paper where six or seven have "found a graveyard." McGregor does not think the business men have any right to encourage another paper either by word or supporting it, and proposes to fight for what he thinks are his rights.—Times.

Name Him Noah

Mrs. Walter Green, one of the forty-eight persons marooned on Hatchett Mound in the bottoms near Smith's Mills, Ky., gave birth to a child during Thursday night without the attention and care of physician. There were only two rooms and a hall to the building where Mrs. Green was confined, and eight other families, numbering forty-eight in all were sheltering in the building when the stork made its visit to the home. A skiff arrived this morning and carried the mother and babe to relatives on the Indiana side of the Ohio river.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

THE WIND TRAVELER

By IZOLA FORRESTER.

For the past month the studio directly opposite the library windows had been most interesting. Evidently it was occupied by a sculptor. She caught glimpses of clay models and plaster casts on long bare shelves. It looked cool and restful in the room. There were long, dark, green-mesh curtains at the windows and a north skylight overhead. Regarding it all once more, Peggie turned and resumed writing to her best chum at college, Nan Carruthers.

"He works incessantly. I think the new one is Diana because she seems to carry a quiver, but maybe it's a Greek girl with a jug. I mean jar. Oh, Nan, how wonderful it must be to really live right in an art atmosphere. You don't know how interesting he looks, though, Nan, and I don't even know his name. I don't even want to know it. Distance lends so much enchantment to this special view."

"Peggie! You're wanted at the phone," called Frances from below. "Mother's at Peabody & Weston's, and she can't remember whether you said to get raisin color or more on the hyacinth."

Peggie went down quickly, without irritation at the interruption. In fact, Peggie hardly knew what irritation meant. She had been blest at birth, the family said, with unfailing good temper. The world was rose color to her and infinitely good to live in. She patted Jack's head lovingly as he wedged by her on the stairs, and tried to think just what would be best to tell her mother so she would really get the right tone. Her voice floated clearly upstairs, while Jack strolled into the library with a captive ant in a capsule box and several peanuts in his pocket.

"Why, dear, it's a sort of betwixt and between. No, no, not a true raisin tint. Remember, amethystine in a dull glow. All right, dear. Thanks so much."

Jack squeezed by her again on her way upstairs and smiled sardonically, with his hands behind him. He was seven and utterly full of guile. In the room below he worked leisurely, happily, constructing his balloon from a nice, oblong cream sheet of paper covered with Peggie's rather large handwriting. And finally he launched it, his wind traveler, from the broad bay window, and eyed it rapturously as the breeze caught it and bore it straight up and over the way. It rocked and dallied it, it coquetted with it like a leaf, and finally it bore it lazily into the open window of the studio opposite, where Winthrop Abbott worked on the new design for the municipal fountain, a Nereid holding up a dolphin.

It lay on the floor near his foot, and as he stepped back he glanced down and read:

"He works incessantly. I think the new one—maybe it is a Greek girl with a jug."

Right here the labor for the fountain stopped. Winthrop took the little paper balloon and slowly opened it. He read it over carefully, looked around at the open skylight, and went to his window to test the way of the wind. And he saw the launcher of aircraft at the bay window opposite, a round-faced, curly haired laddie who waved at him excitedly and called, "Did you get it?"

And then at the window above appeared a face that might have posed for his own fair Nereid maiden, a startled, wide-eyed, anxious face that vanished almost instantly, and Winthrop prepared to return the wind traveler.

Peggie did not appear at that first visit, but when he dined there, two weeks later, shy-eyed and rather cool in manner, Peggie sat next to her mother, and she wore the gown the tint of a California grape bloom. Winthrop thought she looked clad in a cloud of dawn, with her slender white throat above and gray eyes and chestnut hair.

He listened mechanically to his host's congratulations. The Nereid was accepted. Mr. Chalmers was the chairman of the municipal committee on art. But Jack, sitting beside Frances on the opposite side of the table, knew far more than his father of the workings of their distinguished guest's mind. After dinner, just for a moment, Winthrop found her standing with Jack at the bay window, and joined them. Jack smiled up at him. "I sailed it out of this window," he said.

"God bless you, Jack," murmured Winthrop fervently, and Peggie flushed. He bent over her longingly. "Does distance really lend so much enchantment, lady fair? Are you angry with me or the wind, Pierrette?"

"I don't think you should have read it," said Peggie, trying to look twenty-nine instead of nineteen.

"Don't you, really? Perhaps living as I do among the gods has made me superstitious. I should have been afraid not to take their gift."

"I sent it over," Jack explained gravely. "You ought to thank me."

Peggie did not reply, but a little smile curved the corners of her mouth.

The bill introduced by Representative Oliver, of Allen county, providing for the repeal of the law granting women suffrage in school matters, is a good one and ought to pass. Woman suffrage in Kentucky should be made an impossibility and this can best be emphasized by repealing this law, that encourages women to hope for full suffrage.

The demonstration at Van Hooser & Gardner's grocery Saturday was conducted by H. C. Moore, whose "Reception" brand of coffee was served to between 400 and 500 people. Heinz' 57 varieties of goods were also shown and samples given. The demonstration was a big success in attendance and in the reception given to patrons.

Louie's Good Fortune.

Editor Louis Landrum, of the Danville Messenger, it seems will soon receive from the Government something like $5,000 on a war claim, says the Somerset Journal. By way of explanation we hasten to remark that Louis is by no means old enough to have served in the Civil War, this being a claim due his father's estate. Just what a newspaper man would do with the magnificent sum of $5,000 surpasses our circumscribed comprehension, but here's hoping Louie gets it and gets it without further delay.—Times.

Asleep For Ten Years.

The Cynthia Democrat had the following in the "Pert Pertinent" column of a recent issue:

"The Aberdeen, O., man who is distressed because his daughter has been asleep for three weeks should not give up hope. There are some alleged business men in Cynthia who have been asleep for ten years, but we yet have hope of awakening them to the benefits of advertising."
